Reference: Request for clarification on press report

Dear Mr. Officer,

1. We make reference to press reports disclosed in the Valor Economico and Informoney webpages on March 5th 2018 with the title "Suzano and Fibria are close to announcing a merger, sources said" and "Fibria and Suzano raise 5% after newspaper publishes that companies are close to a merger; 7 shares react to balance sheet", in which the following information is contained:

Suzano and Fibria are close to announcing merger, sources say

By Ivo Ribeiro, Stella Fontes and Francisco Goés

SÃO PAULO AND RIO (Updated at 12h11) Suzano Papel e Celulose and Fibria, the two global largest eucalyptus pulp producers are close to announce an agreement involving the combination of their assets. The final format of the transaction is still under discussion, but one of the assumptions already defined is that Votorantim will exit the business and that Suzano will assume the control of the new company, according to market sources.

Shareholders of both companies, Banco Nacional de Desenvolvimento Econômico e Social (BNDES) shall maintain a relevant stake in the new company. Through its investment company, BNDESPar, the bank is owner of 29,08% of Fibria and 6,86% of Suzano.

Over an interview to Valor, the president of BNDES, Paulo Rabello de Castro, confirmed the conversation.

Suzano runs to tie Fibria's acquisition agreement as soon as possible, given the possibility of other interested – foreigner competitors – presenting binding and more aggressive offers, Valor found out.

One of the biggest challenges at this moment is to conciliate the buyer and sellers interests. Suzano seeks to minimize the disbursement of funds in the operation. In turn, Votorantim intends to dispose of all its participation in a single phase.

Under Fibria's by-law, if Votorantim sells the 29.42% it owns in the company, the buyer will have to extend the offer to all shareholders of the company. And this will raise the value of the transaction, considering market prices, to something around USD 10 billion, already discounting the net debt.

Valor found out that an alternative considered to avoid the public tender offer (OPA), mandatory in case of acquisition of 25% or more of the shares of Fibria, is that Votorantim receives cash payment for up to 24.9% of its stake. And exchanges the remaining 4.52% for shares of the new company, remaining for a certain time as a minority or investor. Further on, Votorantim could sell these shares in the market.

In order for this model to prevail, it will also require BNDES's consent, in addition to contemplating the bank's internal interests. BNDES would receive shares of the new company in exchange for the 29.08% it owns in Fibria, and the 6.68% it owns in Suzano.

According to sources, within the state bank there is a group that defends the permanence in the capital of the company resulting from the purchase of Fibria by Suzano. Another evaluates that this is the moment of monetization of the investment made years ago by the bank in this industry and defends the sale of the shares at a good moment for the stock prices. There is already a specific team inside the bank to work on this theme.

The BNDES decision also involves another strategic factor, according to industry sources. Besides Suzano, there are others interested in Fibria and at least one of them, Paper Excellence (PE), would already be seeking for finance to making an offer for 100% of the Ermírio de Moraes pulp producer. With this, there is a risk that one more company in the sector, and the largest one, goes to the hands of the foreign capital.

The Indonesian PE has not hesitated to offer R$ 15 billion by Eldorado Brasil in September, from J&F Investimentos, removing several interested parties, including Fibria.

According to sources heard by Valor, the controlling families of Suzano and Fibria understand that the most interesting transaction is the combination of the assets of the two companies. But other offers will not be ignored. Sought, Votorantim and Suzano did not comment this subject.

“Evident [Na Cara]”

Paulo Rabello de Castro confirmed to Valor that the bank has been discussing with Fibria's and Suzano Papel e Celulose's representatives regarding a possible merger between the two companies.

According to the president of the BNDES, there is an ongoing negotiation between the two companies, and in these discussions the bank has had an active participation. "We have talked and we are integrated in this work that is to join these two giants [from the paper and pulp industry]," he said.

Asked if the conversation indicates to the merger between Suzano and Fibria being possible, Rabello de Castro replied: "It is clear that merger is a possibility, but we are in a moment when nothing else can be said."

Fibria (FIBR3) and Suzano (SUZB3)

Fibria and Suzano's shares skyrocket in this session after Valor Econômico reported that the two largest producers of eucalyptus pulp in the world are close to announcing an agreement to combine their assets.

According to the newspaper, the final format of the transaction is still under discussion, but one of the assumptions already defined is that Votorantim will exit the business and that Suzano will assume the control of the new company, according to market sources heard by the publication.

According to sources heard by the newspaper, the controlling families of Suzano and Fibria understand that the most interesting transaction is the combination of the assets of the two companies. But other offers will not be ignored.

Still on the radar of companies, Fibria announces a new price increase for pulp, of USD 20 per ton for Europe and North America, and of USD 10 per ton for Asia, effective as of April 1st. Thus, the new reference prices by region will be: USD 1,050 per ton in Europe, USD 1,230 per ton in North America and USD 840 per ton in Asia.
